Over the course of his career, Richard's practice has included a variety of practices areas, including general commercial and real estate litigation, employment litigation, products liability matters, toxic tort matters, environmental claims, and general personal injury cases. He has practiced in federal and state courts across the country, achieving favorable results for his clients, such as:

- After a bench trial in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, a $3.5 million judgment in an insurance coverage dispute arising out of an underlying wrongful death action;
- Dismissals and summary judgments in state and federal courts on various employment discrimination claims arising under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Americans with Disabilities Act, and their state law counterparts;
- Finding of non-liability for his client after a full evidentiary public hearing in a religious discrimination case prosecuted before the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination;
- Summary judgment on a strict liability claim brought against a manufacturer of a food processing machine by a plaintiff who sustained catastrophic injuries while using the machine at his place of employment;
- Summary judgment (affirmed on appeal) on behalf of a large Midwest-based cable company which was sued after one of its employees sexually assaulted a customer of the company.
- Dismissal of four of five real-property related claims brought against his client in a lawsuit where the plaintiff alleged over $10 million in damages.

Richard received his undergraduate degree from the University of Michigan and attended DePaul University College of Law as a Dean's Merit Scholar, where he graduated Order of the Coif.
